Outlook

July was another month marked by the recovery of global assets. In the international scenario, the earnings season in the US surprised positively, reinforcing that the impact of the pandemic on activity was less severe than anticipated. Macro data also continued sending the same message. In the local news, the tax reform returned to the debate, with the Government sending its proposal to unify federal taxes. Thus, the more friendly relationship between the Executive and the Legislative is already beginning to show some positive results on the economic agenda, at least regarding the discussion on some points related to. When it comes to the risks, the main short-term one is how the global economy will behave as the financial aid packages to households lessen, as well as the American presidential elections getting close.

The background is a dark blue gradient. In the center, there is a blurred image of a hand pointing at a digital screen displaying a financial chart with various colored lines (red, green, blue) and data points. Two large, thick, orange curved shapes are positioned on the right and bottom-left sides of the image, framing the central content.
